Introduction

We know from history that slavery has ruled the world for centuries. During this period, slaves were the lowest stratum of society and served their rulers. In their imagination it was the law of life. Even the great Greek philosopher Aristotle said in his teaching, "Slavery is a natural phenomenon and must always be the basis of production." Although these views do not conform to modern democratic principles, society in those days lived on the basis of this doctrine. Over time, science, art, culture, and trade flourished. On the basis of the development of trade, various fabrics, handicrafts and food products were exchanged between the peoples. But to date, such a type of trade has also developed that it has become one of the global challenges. This is human trafficking. Yes, unfortunately it is not some kind of fabric or expensive item, it is human trafficking. Finding a solution to this problem, fighting it remains one of the main tasks of the peoples of the world.

Main part

As one of the young generations of Uzbekistan, I understand that we, the youth, can analyze any small idea into a big one, if we have spiritual nourishment and common sense in our thinking. Just as there are many bright days in our lives, we are not immune to the problems that lead to ignorance in a person's life that threatens and worries him.

"Trafficking in human beings, drug addiction and similar atrocities, whether within ourselves or on the other side of the world, threaten our hearts.

Today, human trafficking, a new form of slavery, is considered a crime that threatens the world community. The notion of "slavery" that has remained in the history books has now taken the form of forced labor. Criminal groups involved in human trafficking are forcing people to work not only sexually, but also for forced labor or to transplant their internal organs, distribute drugs, and commit other types of crimes. The main victims of this crime are women and children. It is estimated that between 600,000 and 800,000 women and children are trafficked worldwide each year.

We know that the victims of this crime are mostly people who dream of becoming foreigners, who have failed, who have lost their way and become depressed. It is unfortunate that 72% of victims of trafficking are women and girls. On social media, the "Global Trafficking in Persons Report 2018" of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime caught my attention. This report is based on reports from 142 countries. According to him, in 2016, more than 24,000 people from 97 countries were victims of human trafficking. Worst of all, "sexual exploitation" continues to dominate with 59%. At first glance, these numbers may seem insignificant to us, but the fate of so many women and girls is being cut off from life.

Where we are mistaken in upbringing, our peers are heading for criminal, deceptive paths. Where our minds are lagging behind, we are deceived so quickly. Sometimes on TV I want to ask my contemporaries, who are the victims of this crime, who apologize to their people, cry and regret: "Are you independent? Parents, do you think that you are free and reasonable enough to trust an outsider without listening to your brother or sister and end up with an unknown task? True, mistakes can always be made, but we need to save ourselves from the catastrophe of being easily deceived by those who fill our brains with vain desires!

As far as I know from the sources I searched for, it is said that a large proportion of human traffickers were citizens of East Asian and African countries. It is known that the responsibility for this crime in these areas is also unsatisfactory.

How can we prevent this kind of ignorance happening everywhere? Only when everyone begins to correct himself, his bad flaws, and begin to stop being indifferent to those around us, to each other, will we prevent at least half of this mischief from happening. It is not only the national security agencies of our country that are responsible for ensuring our peace. We must live as if we are all equally responsible for keeping our friends and loved ones around, as well as ourselves, on the right path at all times. We need to educate and protect our minds against all the evils that end in human trafficking and smuggling. As the President said, "Peace is a vital necessity that affects everyone, and its preservation should be a sacred duty of every citizen living in this country."

I can say with my young mind that you, I, and all of us, if we live with every breath, enter the society with new thinking, new ideas, we will be able to overcome any obstacle that threatens our lives with our positive potential!
